In name, at least, the Atchinon, Toneka & Santa Fe railway does not enter El Paso now. It is now the Rio Grande, El Paso & Santa Fe and, so for as operation and management are concerned, the Santa Fe has no voice in the matter, though the road is still a part of the Santa Fe system. This change of name and oberative headquarters is a result of a new state inwoverning railroads in Texas.

General officers of the railway will make their headquarters in El Paso

COURT ANNULS ORDER
ON TAP LINE CASES

Washington, D. C., May 15.—The suppreme court today annuled the interstate commerce commission's order in the tap line cases. The court upheld the commission's order in the tap line cases. The court upheld the commission's order on the ground that it acted arbitrarily in holding that the allowance could not be granted on freight interested in by both the lumber and tap lines.

Jutice day, in announcing the court's decision, said the decision did not prevent the commission from striking down divisions of through rates, if such division were used to grant setual reshales.

"Yer, take that suit case and bundle down."

"We came here yesterday moroing and now it's after four," whispered lielen anxiously, as they went down to the office. Do you suppose they'll charge ms for more than one day."

"Well, they'll not get paid for more than one," grimly.

Helen was werried that they had not given up the room that morning, but evidently it was all right, for when the clerk handed Warren the lill he paid it without comment.

"You didn't, eh? Well, when I tip a waiter it ip him—but he don't approp printe any change of mine! Understand?"

"Sollenly the waiter threw down the thirty five cents on the table. Warren pocketed the ten cent piece and left the quarter with a muttered.

"Tou't care what service you have—I want a taxi."

"I'm sorry, sir, but they don't stop here."

"Oh, that's your graft, is it?" Warren turned sharply and took his sult case from the boy. Warren Insists.
"There is a cab right there, sir." persuasively.
"Yes, I see there is, but I'm not going to fail for that little game. A jot of taxis pass here—now you flag one! Understand?"
"I don't know if they'll stop for me, sir," sulessly.
"You mean you won't get your rake off from the cab respitation."

Helen had seen one of them smile and raise his eyebrows. She longed to turn and shrick out at him, and at the others that Warren was generous—senerous to a fault, that it was only his determination not to be imposed upon that made him rail at walters and cubmen.

When they reached their seats. Warren, in no way perturbed by the incident, sank back with a self complacent. placent: These grafters think all travelers are easy marks. But they'll have to get something newer than those whis-kered hold ups-lif they expect to work 'em off on me."

"Jove, I'm tired." Warren tipped his hat ever his eyes and leaned back leavily. "Hungry, too. Didn't have time for lunch."

"You didn't!" anxiously. "And we had breakfast so early. Warren you shouldn't go all day without food."

"I tell you! I didn't have time." I tell you! I didn't have time." I reinably. "Had to crowd three days work into one."

"Then we'll go into the diner just as soon as the din ng car opens."

"Raschall extra: Latest Boston and New York papers." shouted a train buy who now passed through.

He Braces Up.

Warren bought a couple of papers and threw them into Helen's lap.

The train was moving out now and they were on the sunny side. He upped his hat lower over his eyes, while Helen gazed out at the bleak warehouses that sairted the railroad. The shart rays of the sun illuminated the dingy, soot streaked windows into mirrore of fire.

When a waiter came through with the "first call for dinner". Warren streated the aunouncement with reviving spirits.

"Bring me a dry Martini right away," ordered Warren, taking a table on the shady side.

"I'm surry, sir, but our license ran out six weeks ago. We can't serve any drinkx."

The deuce you can't! Mean to say I can't get a cocktail."

"We've only soft drinks, sir," turning over the dinner card on the back of which was a list of mineral waters instead of "Wines."

"What's that man got?" Warren demanded, glancing across the aisle.

"That's his own, sir, If you've anyething in your grip, why it's all right. But we can't serve it."

"So that's the last wrinkle on the railroad, is it?"

"It's not only this road, sir. The Pennsylvania and New York tensral have both stopped serving it. They've put the license up too high."

"Sloce when?" Warren looked increducious.

"Inst within the last month or so, sir.

The man across the aisle now turned suddenly and handed Warren a traveling finsk with a hearty—
"Won't you have a drink with me? I was caught in the same fix last trip, so I came propared,"
"Are they going to keep this thing up," asked Warren, taking the flask with the same hearty good will with which it was offered.
"Well, the new tax is pretty high. I believe every dining car has to pay three hundred for each after in which it serves liquor."

That is stiff. Still, I'd think they'd take in enough to pay it."
"Cream of tomato or consomme?" queried the watter, as he removed their cyster shells.

A Bottle of Viehy." ordered Warren.
The car was fast illing up, and before they reached the roast almost every seat was taken. Each table watter, seat was falsen. Each table watter four, and to Helen's discomfort two young mon were new ushered to their table.
